THE PHILADELPHIA ORCHESTRA RETURNS TO ANN ARBOR
FOR ITS 268TH UMS PERFORMANCE

Music Director Yannick Nézet-Séguin to Lead Program featuring Rachmaninoff, Tchaikovsky, and Nico Muhly

Concert to be Broadcast Live on Interlochen Public Radio

Performance Marks the Ensemble’s First Ann Arbor Performance in 24 Years

ANN ARBOR, MI (September 6, 2018) — The University Musical Society (UMS) will bring the Philadelphia Orchestra to Hill Auditorium (825 N University Ave, Ann Arbor) for one performance on Thursday, September 27, 2018 at 7:30 pm. The performance marks the orchestra’s 268th appearance under UMS auspices and its first return to Ann Arbor in 24 years.

Music director Yannick Nézet-Séguin will lead the orchestra in a stunning program that features a suite from Nico Muhly’s sensational opera Marnie, which receives its US premiere this fall at the Metropolitan Opera; Rachmaninoff’s Symphonic Dances, which were written for the Philadelphia Orchestra in 1940; and Tchaikovsky’s spectacular Violin Concerto, performed by the Georgian violinist Lisa Batiashvili in her UMS debut.

The performance will be broadcast live on Interlochen Public Radio across 20 counties in Northern Michigan. The broadcast will also be carried on WRCJ 90.9 FM in Detroit and WAKR 90.5 FM in Lansing.

The Philadelphia Orchestra first performed at Hill Auditorium in 1913 — just seven months after the hall opened — and eventually served as the orchestra-in-residence for the Ann Arbor May Festival for 49 years (1936-84). Many of classical music’s most cherished soloists performed alongside the orchestra throughout these years, including Jascha Heifetz (violin), Gregor Piatigorsky (cello), Rudolf Serkin (piano), William Warfield (bass), Joan Sutherland (soprano), Van Cliburn (piano), Montserrat Caballé (soprano), Glenn Gould (piano), Vladimir Horowitz (piano), and Beverly Sills (soprano). Beloved composers like Sergei Rachmaninoff, Igor Stravinsky, and Aaron Copeland also shared the May Festival stage with the ensemble.

“We love hearing from audience members about the fond memories and deep community connections created throughout the Philadelphia Orchestra’s rich history at UMS,” said UMS president Matthew VanBesien. “We look forward to reuniting the orchestra with Ann Arbor audiences and adding to that history in September when we open our 140th Annual Choral Union Series with this homecoming.”
